PERFORMING ARTS STUDENTS SAY “SHOWER US WITH FLOWERS!”

Yeovil College's Performing Arts students are asking for help from the general public for props for their annual production, due to take place at the Octagon Theatre in February.

This year, the students are making a welcome return to the Theatre with an exciting version of 'Little Shop of Horrors', the sci-fi horror musical love story set in a back-street florists with a secret.

The students are in desperate need of realistic silk flowers to stock the shop, as well as a vintage 1950s/1960s cash till.

Performing Arts lecturer Julie Read said “This is going to be the biggest production the College has done for a while and we're really keen to make it look the part. Work has already begun on the costumes and set design, but it soon became clear that we needed help to get enough flowers to fill Mr Muschnik's shop. We are hoping that there are lots of people out there who are keen to get involved and support the students by sending us their fake flowers. Not only will everyone who volunteers a flower or flowers be listed in the event programme, they will also have the satisfaction of being part of what we hope will be the students' biggest and best production yet.”

Anyone who would like to donate flowers to the show can drop them off at the College reception along with their name between now and Tuesday 22nd December or from Monday 4th January onwards.

If you can loan the College a vintage till to make the shop really look the part, please telephone 01935 845314.
